

How to transfer from a paid to a free form of study?

So do not upset your family with the unpleasant news that parents will have to pay for their studies for five long years. In fact, this is not so, because for an exemplary study you can get a nice bonus in the form of a transfer to the status of "state employee". The main thing is to set a goal, to love and understand your future specialty.

Main conditions for participation in the translation program

So, the student is counting on a free place among state employees. The desire is good, but this is not at all enough to soon implement the plan.

What else is required? Of course, the action of this program within the framework of a certain university, the availability of vacancies on the budget and a good impression of the dean's office staff.

Otherwise, such a desire is relegated to the background, and you will have to pay for the next semester of study unambiguously.

If there are vacancies, it's time to nominate your candidacy, but not everything is so simple.

This option will be considered only if:

- there is no payment arrears;
- there is no academic debt and "tails" in subjects;
- there are no disciplinary sanctions;
- the average grade of academic performance is not less than "4".

If all these requirements are strictly met, then there is a chance for a fateful translation. But there is a second obstacle on the way to free education - beneficiaries.

If you belong to this category of students, then you can rejoice, because most of the competitors are left far behind. If the beneficiaries compete with you, you will have to strain yourself.

First of all, let's decide which of the contract students can count on such a profitable student transfer?

1. Orphans;
2. Students whose one of the parents is disabled of the first group.
3. The student's parents died while pursuing higher education.

In order to prove your status as a student-beneficiary, you must provide the relevant documents that have real legal force. Only in this case your turn to the long-awaited budget place will noticeably advance.

Now let's talk about how exactly the transfer to a free form of study is carried out, and how soon you can feel like a student in a budget department.

Student actions

So, the student has reliably found out that there are budget places available. The dean's office, as a rule, does not hide such valuable information from students, but publishes it on a board near the dean's office or on a personal website. There you can also find out the specific number of budget places, the rules for submitting an application and other nuances on the topic.

When all the issues are resolved, and the student really meets the requirements for obtaining a budgetary place, it is necessary to write a corresponding application to the dean's office.

This may be a standard text that the leadership of the dean's office cannot but take into consideration, but it is advisable to back it up with documents on the provision of benefits, personal and academic achievements, as well as academic performance indicators, and an active student position.

When the application is received and accepted, an attestation commission must meet within 5 days, which makes the appropriate decision - to grant or reject the application of the contract student.

If the decision is still positive, then the transfer is carried out within 10 days. If negative, then the student must be presented with a written reason and certified by the seal of the dean's office. Such global issues are definitely not resolved verbally.

It is important to note that translation is possible only if there are budget places, otherwise everything remains the same. And there, let the student decide for himself whether this option suits him or not. "
