

What is a military department?

General information about the military department

The military department is a special course for training reserve officers within the framework of a higher educational institution. Not every university offers its students such a valuable service, and therefore the entry competition for such educational institutions is much higher.

It just so happened that the ratings of universities with a military department are growing rapidly, and the number of applicants is only growing every year.

What is the advantage? Upon graduation, the graduate receives not only the status of "Young Specialist", but also "Reserve Officer".

Accordingly, on the hands will be not only a diploma of higher education, but also a military ID, which in the future is a mandatory document in case of successful employment.

So you can no longer run from the military registration and enlistment office, fearing another call, the graduate is a ready-made officer, as if he had just graduated from a higher military educational institution yesterday.

Another advantage of such an integrated approach to the education system is the fact that military training takes place at the same time as civilian, that is, the student does not waste time on graduation to military service, but immediately receives a military document marked "Reserve officer".

calculus homework help

So do not waste such a unique opportunity that a particular university provides its students.

Since not every higher educational institution has a military department, trained applicants with good physical and academic training enter such a multidisciplinary university.

They weigh their real possibilities, have far-sighted plans for the future, and have set life priorities from early childhood.

Accordingly, the rest of the universities can only be content with mediocre applicants, who certainly will not bring victories to the university in sports areas.

Organization of the military department of the university

So, if the university has a military department, this does not mean that a third-year student is conditionally enlisted in the army.

The educational process is still in the first place, and the military department takes a secondary place.

Simply put, most of the week the student visits civilian couples, masters his main specialty, and on strictly allotted days, drilling and military training become his main occupation.

The concept of "military department" is rather collective, but combines the following forms of organizing the educational process:

- military training room;
- military training center;
- faculty of teaching.

These are far from all the capabilities of the military department, but the essence remains the same: obtaining military training and issuing a military ID, which confirms the officer's status.

This concept evokes pride, so maybe you should try your hand?

This is a great advantage, because the student has a unique opportunity to feel himself in the army, that is, to complete the so-called "survival course" in full.

To determine which university with a military department to enter, it is recommended to look at the official website of the Ministry of Defense, where full lists are published with the latest information.

After that, you can make your final choice, which university for future education suits the applicant the most.