

Teaching local students

So, the stage of admission is behind, and you can enjoy the majestic and long-awaited status of a freshman. In life, practically nothing changes, except that you have to go to school every day, and not walk, as it was in the case of the district school.

Yes, the teachers are a little stricter, but there are always caring parents and loyal friends nearby

Local students feel confident and believe that they can always find a way out.

Indeed, they are even perceived in society in a completely different way. It is easier for them in all spheres of life, since there is no particular need to "knock out their place in the sun."

It so happens that this category of students represents unofficial leaders who have set a goal and are tirelessly pursuing it.

Provincial student education

Here are some weak points, and here it is worth focusing on them:

1. Wardrobe. It is difficult to determine the style of provincials, most often in their appearance several stylistic directions are collected at once, which are simply incompatible with each other.

Such a ridiculous outfit often becomes the object of ridicule of the capital's fashionistas, and the provincials do not feel very comfortable in such a sophisticated society. This gives rise to internal uncertainty, which in the future can develop into a serious inferiority complex.

2. Makeup. Provincial women do not know how to paint correctly, although they are sure that makeup is an integral part of the image. The result is something ridiculous, and the image of a rural girl is associated with "Tula gingerbread".

It's funny, it's better not to wear makeup at all than to experiment so horribly with your appearance, to cause ridicule from the outside and general censure.

3. Conversation. The speech of provincials and urban students is noticeably different, and some of the phrases of the former even throw teachers into a stupor, cause general ridicule.

This problem persists for the entire period of study, although the provincials do their best to control all their conversations. In any case, this is a significant difference between the two estates, which, as a rule, is revealed already at the first greeting.

4. Behavior. Provincial dwellers are more open and do not suffer from complexes, which is wild for most urban dwellers. Such openness and frankness is sometimes simply shocking, causing discomfort not only to fellow students, but also to teachers.

You need to learn modesty and tact in order to feel like a city dweller by the end of the fifth year.

5. Accommodation. All nonresident students, or rather most of them, live in a student hostel. Here they have little contact with city students who have their own living space; but all the same, everyday squabbles arise from time to time.
6. Training. It is more difficult for nonresident students to study, since all new knowledge is difficult to store in the head, especially since basic knowledge from school, alas, is not enough.
7. Communication with fellow students. If there are more provincial students in the academic group, then problems in the team are extremely rare.

If there are only 2 - 3 provincials for the entire stream, then they most often become objects of ridicule and complete ignorance.

It is very difficult to find contact with the locals, it is even more difficult to achieve in their minds respect for their extraordinary person.

So problems arise in all walks of life, and provincial students after entering the first year must be ready for battle.

Someone's struggle for a "place in the sun" lasts a semester, while others are militant throughout their studies.

Tips for nonresident students

Giving advice to city students is pointless, because they are confident in their own superiority and consider themselves "kings of life." Life, of course, teaches, but it is better for such comrades to "step on the rake" on their own so that it is easier to understand.

As for the provincials, they know how to hear and listen, understand their shortcomings and want to become better.

All of this is possible, and here are some good tips:

1. It is not worth solving all problems with conflicts, since a solution will not be found, but a scandalous reputation will be attached.
2. Do not let people laugh at themselves, because such ridicule and mockery will soon become the norm, and unpleasant nicknames will not remain for life.
3. To improve your appearance, it is advisable to observe the peculiarities of the urban style and not experiment once again.
4. Modesty is always valuable, and many teachers value this very personality trait.
5. You should not contact a company in the presence of which you feel discomfort and inner stiffness. Perhaps this subconscious mind tells you which people are best to avoid.
6. You can find yourself a local girlfriend or friend who will help you get closer to the image of a city student.

7. It is always important not to forget about the treachery of the big city, not to go on about dubious proposals, to ignore dishonest people.
