

Dorm: how to build relationships with neighbors?

First conflict. Cleanliness

All people are different, and everyone has their own idea of cleanliness and comfort. Some are quite satisfied with the so-called "creative mess", while others simply cannot stand the large accumulation of things under their feet, on chairs and sofas.

Very soon, correct remarks will turn into a grandiose scandal, and seemingly friendly neighbors will suddenly turn into bitter enemies.

This happens often, and against the background of domestic conflicts and to assault with blood feud is at hand.

Second conflict. Did not get along

This is the most common reason why dorm roommates turn to the commandant for immediate resettlement.

This is a really weighty argument, since some students came to study and receive higher education, while others are more interested in prospects in their personal lives, new acquaintances and driving emotions.

For example, a party girl cannot understand a quiet person, and it is difficult for a crammer to accept the laziness and unwillingness to learn from her roommate.

First, they sort things out quietly, in a whisper; defend their position; but very soon the confidence in one's own righteousness leads to a scandal, and there can be no talk of further living together under one roof.

Third conflict. Envy

This is a dangerous feeling that will not lead to anything good, especially if the new roommates in the block have known each other quite recently.

The fact is that in the student dormitory representatives of different social classes meet and settle together, so it is possible that a student from a modest family will feel uncomfortable in the company of a wealthy roommate.

It is one thing if envy manifests itself in a latent form and scratches the cat only in the soul and heart, but it is much more dangerous when petty mischief, deception, intrigue and set-ups begin.

There is no need to think about further friendship.

Fourth conflict. Didn't share love

This problem applies to both girls and guys, especially if the sympathy is very strong and long-lasting.

Such a phenomenon is customary when we love, but do not love us, and vice versa; only to accept this truth and understand it is very difficult.

It's unpleasant when a lover meets with a roommate, but he doesn't even notice you, he doesn't even ask your name.

Resentment with each new visit not to you grows, and a plan of revenge on the unfaithful and lucky roommate matures in my head.

And then what to say? It is enough to watch a few modern or classic films to understand what human envy, resentment and anger can lead to.

The last conflict. Alcohol

I think I will not surprise anyone if I say that many residents of student hostels noticeably abuse alcoholic beverages, do not know the measure.

The situation is familiar, but in such a tumultuous company there is bound to be a so-called "victim of circumstances", which, as a rule, is a roommate.

Here he just has to endure all the hardships and hardships of student life, since the food given by his parents for a week becomes an appetizer of one feast for new friends, and the room in the hostel is a place of regular gathering and noisy festivities.

It's not just learning, it's impossible to get enough sleep - that's where conflicts begin, which in a state of alcoholic intoxication can even end in "fist fights" of the parties.

These are, perhaps, the most common situations when conflict situations gradually increase between roommates in a student dormitory, requiring immediate resolution and sometimes even the participation of the dean's office.

But it is best not to take it to extremes, because any misunderstanding can be resolved peacefully.
